Customers of DCS Couriers are invited to deal with their courier on a first name basis, and full contact details and timetable scheduling are provided.

The accounts receivable ledger is a subledger in which is recorded all credit sales made by a business. It is useful for segregating into one location a record of all amounts invoiced to customers, as well as all credit memos and (more rarely) debit memos issued to them, and all payments made against invoices by them.

To avoid accounting confusion and accurately track accounts receivable, a business that extends credit to customers must maintain a special set of accounting records called subsidiary ledgers.

Accounts payable are amounts a company owes because it purchased goods or services on credit from a supplier or vendor. Accounts receivable are amounts a company has a right to collect because it sold goods or services on credit to a customer. Accounts payable are liabilities.
